

Affordable Housing Study

Tracking the Need and Increasing Capacity

What is affordable and accessible housing?

Who needs it?

How do we help to better meet the need for people with disabilities?

What is the Affordable Housing Study about?

If you (or a member of your family or household) have an Intellectual or Developmental Disability and need housing now or in the future, this project is to help you have an accessible place that you can afford. It is a complex task that includes looking at:

- Who needs accessible and affordable housing?
- How do we keep track of the ongoing need?
- How can we better support and encourage developers to create affordable and accessible homes for people with disabilities?

Our Goals

Our task is to provide the governor and legislature with information they need to support accessible and affordable housing where you need it. To do this, we will:

- Get input from people whose lives are affected by the lack of affordable housing, as well as input from housing developers.
- Define and describe affordable and accessible housing.
- Identify who needs it.
- Identify gaps and offer solutions.

Comments

If you have comments about this project, please call Sheng Fang at 360-515-8043. Please use 711 for Washington Relay Service (TTY). Or, email AffordableHousingDDA@dshs.wa.gov.