

Washington State's Child Support Program

An Overview

& Health Services

Transforming lives

Child support is important

Children need support from both parents. When a parent does not live with the child, child support is the money paid to provide for the child's basic needs.

- A child's basic needs include food, shelter and clothing
- Can also include day care costs and health care coverage
- Child support is more than a parent's gift of time, love and emotional support
- Taking care of children's needs gives them a healthier, more secure life
- We do not guarantee child support collections or payments

The Division of Child Support

The Department of Social and Health Services, Division of Child Support (DCS) collects child support for children who have a parent or parents out of the home including those receiving public assistance.

Parents and caretakers can ask DCS for help collecting child support and enforcing health care coverage.

If you do not already have an order for child support, DCS can establish an administrative child support order. DCS can also refer the case for establishment of parentage.

For more information about DCS:

- Call us at 800-442-KIDS
- Or go to our Website at www.childsupportonline.wa.gov

DCS can help you...

- Get a child support order for your children
- Establish parentage
- Collect current and back child support
- Enforce medical support
- Modify your child support order
- Work with other states to collect support on your behalf

DCS cannot help you with...

- Child custody or visitation disputes
- Enforcement of community property settlements
- Collection of attorney's fees
- Other non-child support related debts

Parents or caretakers receiving public assistance do not need an application because the Community Services Division provides the necessary information to DCS.

Public assistance

It is hard for a parent or caretaker to carry the full responsibility for all the needs of a child. Sometimes parents and caretakers must get help from the taxpayers through cash public assistance to pay for a child's housing, food and medical needs. This assistance is known as Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF).

- While a parent or caretaker receives public assistance for a child in their home or in foster care, the state keeps most collected child support.
- When the family no longer needs public assistance, DCS collects child support and sends it to the parent or caretaker.

- The state may keep some child support payments when the family is no longer on public assistance.

For more information about public assistance, call the Community Services Division at 800-865-7801.

Or go to the Web Site www.washingtonconnection.org to apply, renew, or report a change.

Parentage

Parentage is the legal relationship between parents and a child.

Determining the legal parents benefits the child in many ways, including helping children get health care coverage, veteran's benefits, or social security benefits.

Establishing parentage may result in an order setting a child support obligation.

There are several ways to legally establish parentage:

- Be the parent who gives birth to the child.
- The parents marry or enter into a registered domestic partnership before the child's birth.
- The parent who gives birth to the child and an individual who wants to establish parentage voluntarily sign a legal form called an Acknowledgment of Parentage and file it with the Department of Health. The birth certificate will name them as the child's parents.
- Go to court.
- DCS offers genetic testing to determine paternity (fatherhood) in certain cases.

For more information:

- Call 1-800-442-5437
- Or go to our parentage establishment website at www.childsupportonline.wa.gov
(click on Establishing Parentage)

Court orders

In Washington, Superior and Tribal Courts establish orders and decide who should pay the child support. Court orders can be for divorce, custody, parentage and/or other child support related issues. Only the court can make changes to a court order.

DCS cannot change the wording in court orders. State law requires DCS to follow court orders exactly as written. When DCS establishes a child support order, we include a medical support provision requiring both parents to provide health care coverage, when it is available through an employer or union.

Arrears debts

- DCS and the courts set the monthly child support payment using the Washington State Child Support Schedule and according to the parent's ability to pay.
- Unpaid child support payments become a debt called an arrears debt.
- Money owed to custodial parents for back child support or owed to DSHS for TANF assistance given to the child are arrears debts.

Changing a child support order (Modification)

If you are not sure what kind of case you have or you want more information about modifications contact us and include your email or phone number at DCSMods@dshs.wa.gov or contact your Support Enforcement Officer at 1-800-442-5437. Parents can also modify child support orders on their own, or with help from a family law facilitator or private attorney. Facilitators may be able to help with the pro se (for yourself) modification process. This means going to court on your own without the help of an attorney. Sometimes proceeding pro se is a faster way to change a child support order.

To find the facilitator in your County Clerk's Office call 800-933-6772.

- Or go to www.courts.wa.gov or www.mrsc.org.

Payments to DCS

Your child support order says where to send payments.

Most support orders provide for income withholding, which means that the employer is required to withhold support payments from the noncustodial parent's net earnings which is the amount left after legally required deductions are made and send the money to the Washington State Support Registry (WSSR). In most instances, DCS may take withholding action even if the noncustodial parent is not behind in payments.

Other orders allow payers to send payments to DCS by personal check, on the Web or by Electronic Funds Transfer (EFT). For information about EFT and Web payments call 800-468-7422 or see the DCS Website at www.childsupportonline.wa.gov.

Mail checks or money orders to:

WSSR
PO Box 45868
Olympia, WA 98504-5868

To insure accurate processing, please be sure your name and Social Security Number are clearly noted on your payment

Payments to parents and caretakers

Custodial Parents can receive child support payments by direct deposit or a prepaid debit card called the DCS Card. These methods allow DCS to deposit payments electronically. The DCS Card has a VISA logo, and allows DCS to deposit payments so that ATM machines or point of sale locations (that accept VISA cards) can dispense child support money.

Direct deposit and the DCS Card authorization forms are available on the DCS Web Site at www.childsupportonline.wa.gov (click on Division of Child Support Forms). For more information call 1-800-468-7422.

Reasons that can delay activity on your case

- It takes time for DCS to receive a court order from the Superior Court Clerk and set up a case
- Sometimes, DCS cannot find the noncustodial parent to serve legal papers, attach wages or other assets
- Sometimes, the non custodial parent requests a hearing to challenge the child support payment or the arrears debt
- If the non-custodial parent is receiving public assistance or is unemployed, DCS may not be able to collect support
- If the custodial parent does not provide a current address, payments may be delayed

Enforcement

State and federal laws give DCS many tools to collect child support. We call it “enforcement” when we use collection tools. Some tools we use to collect child support include:

- Attachment of wages and other income like unemployment and retirement benefits
- Suspension of driver’s, fishing, hunting and other licenses
- Seizure and sale of cars, boats and other vehicles
- Attachment of investments, savings and checking accounts
- Attachment of IRS returns, inheritances, and lottery winnings
- Passport denial

Other states

State and federal laws allow states to work together when parents live in different states. DCS can ask other states to help establish, modify and collect child support and the other states can ask DCS to help them.

Because all state laws are not the same, it may be hard to collect regular payments when two or more states work on a child support case. When this happens, DCS tries to find and attach wages. Some states charge fees for services, and some states charge interest on unpaid arrears debt balances. Washington State does charge a $35 annual fee if you have never received Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF), Tribal TANF, or Assistance to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) for children in the household. Washington State does collect interest for other states.

Tribal cases

Some Native American tribes have their own child support programs. Other tribes may have their own child support laws and processes for establishing and enforcing child support when a parent is a tribal member, lives on the reservation, or works for the tribe. DCS works with tribes to establish and enforce child support cases.

Call DCS for information about tribal child support or go to our Web Site at www.childsupportonline.wa.gov (click on Tribal Relations).

Both parents should tell DCS when:

- The child moves in or out of the household
- You move and have a new address
- You change your name
- There is a new court order
- You or the child goes on public assistance, Social Security Disability (SSD), or Supplemental Security Income (SSI)

DCS contacts parents and caretakers to ask if they have information to help collect child support. Tell us if the non-custodial parent:

- Changes jobs, becomes unemployed or injured
- Uses other names and Social Security numbers
- Owns cars, houses, or investments or bank accounts
- Has family and friends who might know information
- Is in jail, prison or work release

Family violence

You can get help if you or your children are in danger. Physical abuse is a crime.

- Call the Domestic Violence Hotline at 800-562-6025
- Call the Child Protective Services (CPS) 800-562-5624 or 866-ENDHARM
- Call the Address Confidentiality Program (ACP) at 800-822-1065
- Tell your Support Enforcement Officer or your public assistance worker. State law requires us to report if we believe a child is the victim of abuse or neglect.
